1 · Purpose and principles

This routine turns examined suspicion into a report Finanspolisen can use, and governs everything around that act: the decision, the drafting standard, the filing, the aftermath, and the register. The following principles govern. The decision is the MLRO's alone: no business approval is sought and none may be demanded. The threshold is reasonable grounds to suspect. That means a basis the MLRO can put into words after examination. It is well below proof, and it does not depend on the amount: no minimum value exists. Attempts are reportable: a declined or abandoned relationship, or a refused transaction, is assessed the same way. Meddelandeförbudet governs every action this routine touches.

2 · The decision

- S1 Referral arrives with the SOP-19 case record or equivalent context. The MLRO reads the case to the examination standard. Further work is requested only where a specific gap blocks the decision, because the statutory clock, without undue delay, is already running.
- S2 Decide: report, or do not report. Both outcomes are recorded with reasons in the register; a non-report rationale states why the grounds examined do not reach the threshold. IF new facts later arrive on a non-reported case, THEN the decision shall be retaken on the new facts.

- S3 Pending transactions. IF a suspicious transaction has not been executed, THEN it is not executed until the report is made, unless stopping it is impossible or would probably make the investigation harder, and never merely because stopping would reveal the examination, in which case it may be executed and the report made immediately after, with the reasoning recorded. This ordering is law, not preference.

3 · Drafting standard

The report also states the current balances, whether funds are still held, whether the transaction was stopped, the intended recipient, and where the money went.

The report is written for a reader with no prior context, and its quality is measured by whether that reader can act on it. Required content:

- Subjects: every relevant person and entity with identifiers, roles and relationships, including those Mynta identified but the customer never declared.
- The relationship: products, opening date, stated purpose, the S3 baseline, risk class and any EDD history.
- The activity: chronological narrative with amounts, dates, counterparties, accounts and product areas; totals and patterns stated, not left for the reader to compute.
- The suspicion: what makes this activity suspicious against this customer's profile and which typologies it resembles, with the indicators listed; facts and assessment kept visibly separate.
- Attachments: the documents that let the reader verify the narrative: statements, due-diligence extracts, the examination record where useful.

Style rules: plain language, no internal jargon or system names without explanation, no speculation presented as fact, and no copy-paste of alert text in place of narrative. The deputy MLRO reviews every draft before filing except where absence makes the MLRO and drafter the same person, which is recorded.

4 · Filing

- S4 File through goAML under Mynta's registration, using the report type the situation calls for; capture the acknowledgment and reference into the register. Technical filing failure is escalated the same day and the report is delivered by the fallback channel Finanspolisen designates, with the failure documented.
- S5 After filing. The relationship decision is taken deliberately: continue with enhanced monitoring per SOP-18/22, restrict products, or exit via SOP-23. Exit timing is coordinated so that the action itself does not disclose the report. Nothing in customer-facing handling changes in tone or content because a report exists.
- S6 FIU follow-up. Questions and disclosure orders from Finanspolisen are answered by the MLRO function within the demanded time, completely and only through this routine; business teams receiving any authority contact route it here untouched.

5 · The register and access

Access to reports is named and least-privilege, logged, and checked on a set cycle. Staff outside the function see only the actions they must take, never the report itself.

The internal reporting register records referrals, decisions with reasons, drafts, filings with references, FIU correspondence and relationship decisions. Access is restricted to the MLRO function; existence of a report on a customer is visible to other systems only as the enhanced-handling flags it produces, never as the fact itself. Register extracts appear in the MLRO report as counts and themes, not names.

6 · Tipping

Prohibited disclosure includes telling the customer or any third party that examination has occurred, that a report has been or may be made, or anything from which that could be inferred, including through decline wording, exit letters, or unusual handling. Lawful exceptions (disclosure to the supervisor, and the narrow statutory group and inter-institution cases) are exercised only by the MLRO after checking the conditions. Breach is a criminal exposure for the individual and gross misconduct at Mynta.

6b · After the report

A report does not automatically end the relationship. Continue, restrict or exit is decided separately, considering any police instructions, frozen funds and the tipping-off risk.

7 · Records, timeliness and quality

SAR files follow GOV-02 §10 retention in the restricted store. Timeliness is tracked referral-to-decision and decision-to-filing, with medians and outliers in the MLRO report. Annually, the MLRO and deputy run a look-back on a sample of filings and non-report decisions for consistency of threshold application and drafting quality. The conclusions feed training. Where the threshold has drifted, it is recalibrated, on record.
